BROAD ATTACK IS MADE ON TESTIMONY OF STATE'S EXPERTS

Illinois Penmanship Wizard Testifies in Behalf of Hauptmann

JOHN M. TRENDLEY States on Stand He Studied Ransom Notes for Over Two Hours

By James L. Kilgallen
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
COURT ROOM, FLEMINGTON, N. J., Feb. 1.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann did not write the Lindbergh ransom notes, John M. Trendley, of East St. Louis, Illinois, the first defense handwriting expert, testified today at the trial of Hauptmann, who is accused of murdering the Lindbergh baby.

Trendley, 67 year old wizard in penmanship, was asked by Edward J. Reilly, chief defense counsel, if he had studied all evidence introduced by the State's array of handwriting experts.

Trendley said he had. "As a result of your examinations of the ransom note and the 'request' writing of Hauptmann, you are able to give an opinion whether the defendant Hauptmann wrote the ransom notes?" asked Reilly.

"I believe he did not," said Trendley in a positive tone. Trendley said he had studied the ransom notes for over two hours; had carefully examined specimens of Hauptmann's penmanship and had studied the various charts the State introduced in connection with the handwriting.

Q.—I show you the ransom nursery note and call your attention to the 'd'. Do you find in Mr. Osborn's chart the 'd' which begins the note?

Trendley got down from the stand and looked over the array of black and white exhibits on the wall.

"I cannot find it here," he said.

Q.—Will you point out if the 'ear' on 'd' ear' is on Mr. Osborn's chart?

A.—It is not on there.

Reilly was moving in on a broad attack on the formidable testimony of the State's handwriting expert.

TOUGH GUYS GET RELIGION

Richmond, Va., Feb. 1.—The two hard-boiled killers awaiting death in Virginia's electric chair here tomorrow, pasty-faced Robert Mais and stolid, broken-legged Walter Legenza, had "got religion." They have less than 24 hours left and they were singing Psalms. These were the "tough guys" who told Virginia authorities a week or so ago to "hurry up and get it over with." These were the two who said they'd never crack as the shadow of the "hot seat" darkened their earthly eyes. These were the men, too, who told police boasting that "they'd killed plenty."

Tomorrow they must die for the murder of E. M. Hubbard, Federal Reserve bank truck driver. Soon after sunrise they will go separately into the white-walled death room of the State Penitentiary. A few minutes later they will be rolled out on the white rubber-tired cart after 2300 volts of electricity has crashed through their bodies, and a doctor with a stethoscope has declared them dead.

So will end the meteoric career of two ring-leaders of the famous tri-state gang; men who after they shot their way out of jail here and were re-captured, confessed to lawless acts all up and down the eastern coast.

EIGHT POINT RULE BOOK FOR SCHOOL HOME WORK

HARRISBURG, Feb. 1.—(INS)—The Department of Public Instruction today announced an eight-point rule book for guiding teachers in assigning home work for public school students.

Superintendent of Public Instruction James N. Rule said the list was compiled in answer to requests from many teachers for guidance on the place and function of home study. The rules follow:

1. Consider the individual pupil and home conditions.
2. Exercise care that in school and out-of-school assignments do not work against the development of independence of work.
3. Co-ordinate individualized home study assignments with individualized classroom teaching.
4. Emphasize "how to study" for all home work.
5. Concentrate on creative home assignments in which other members of the family are likely to participate willingly.
6. Arrange a co-operative home work schedule among teachers so that every teacher does not assign work the same day.
7. Watch carefully the amount of home work being accomplished.
8. Hear parents' complaints sympathetically, investigate them and adjust them.

Will Discuss County Welfare Plan at Court House Meeting

A meeting of general interest to all voters and of vital importance to those interested in Welfare Work in the county, will be held at the Court House in Doylestown, Thursday, February 14th, at 2:30 o'clock p. m.

Dr. Wilmer Krusen will present to this meeting the new County Unit Welfare Plan which is to be introduced in the form of a bill at present session of the Legislature.

As representatives from this district in both the Senate and the House at Harrisburg will vote on this measure, and as its provisions will affect every taxpayer and welfare worker in the county, it is thought advisable to thoroughly discuss the plan before asking the Legislature to vote for or against it.

The meeting will be open to all interested, and a cordial invitation is extended by the Committee of Public Welfare of the Bucks County Federation of Women's Clubs under whose auspices it will be held.

THAWING PIPES CAUSE OF THIRD FIRE IN ONE WEEK

Barn and Contents at Richlandtown Destroyed; Loss is $5,000

CARRIED NO INSURANCE

Another disastrous fire due to thawing water pipes with gasoline torch resulted yesterday when a large barn between Richlandtown and Pleasant Valley was destroyed with its contents causing a loss estimated at $5,000.

None of the loss is covered by insurance and the owner, Stanley Perkoski, occupies the place.

Yesterday morning at about 10:30 Perkoski was thawing pipes in the barn with a gasoline torch when the place caught fire. He endeavored to fight the flames with water but it soon spread into the large mows and it was but a short time before the entire structure was ablaze.

The 22 cows which were in the barn at the time were gotten out safely by Perkoski and his wife.

A call was sent to the Richlandtown Fire Company and the apparatus got part way to the scene but could not reach the barn due to snow on the roads.

This is the third fire within a week in Bucks County caused by thawing pipes with a torch.

Lecture Series Opens At The Woods School Clinic

LANGHORNE, Feb. 1.—Members of the medical profession from Harrisburg, Lancaster, Trenton, Doylestown, Philadelphia, New York, and other points in the Eastern states, totalling 50 guests, were present at the first lecture in a series "The Scientist Looks at the Emotionally Unstable Child" which occurred at The Woods School, Bellevue and Flowers avenues, last evening.

The presiding officer was Dr. Harold D. Palmer, of the Institute of the Pennsylvania Hospital, Philadelphia, who presented the lecturer of the evening, Dr. A. S. Blumgarten, chief of the endocrine department, Lenox Hill Hospital, New York, and lecturer at the New School for Social Research, New York. The subject of Dr. Blumgarten was "The Influence of the Endocrine Glands."

Many of the new ideas in endocrinology were brought before the large professional gathering. Dr. Palmer stated that the whole idea of the endocrine gland has changed so rapidly that there have been many new phases brought to light in the past six months.

Much discussion occurred, with the assemblage of those deeply interested in the subject taking part.

At the conclusion of the program the men and women adjourned to the drawing rooms where they partook of refreshments.

The Woods Schools recently initiated a child research clinic to contribute from the schools' experience to knowledge in the field, and to aid in bringing about a broader understanding of the problems of the exceptional child. The lecture series is part of the clinic activities.

The lecture scheduled for January 24th was postponed owing to weather conditions, and will occur on February 7th. The speaker is to be Dr. Temple Fay, professor of neurosurgery, Temple University School of Medicine, Philadelphia.

INSTALL OFFICERS

Mrs. Louis Townsend, Mansion street, district president of the P. O. of A., installed officers at Morrisville Camp, 197, last evening. The installation was held at Mystic Chain Hall. Mrs. Townsend was assisted by Mrs. Warren Thompson.

HOLD MOTHERS' MEETING

Miss Jovite Petillo sang a solo, "A New Year Is Dawning," and at the close of the meeting Miss Rose Vivian sang "Love To Tell The Story." The meeting was well attended.

JAPAN GIVEN ISLANDS IN PACIFIC OFF HAWAII BY SECRET AGREEMENT; REFUSAL TO SURRENDER 'MANDATE' LEADS TO REVELATION OF PROMISES

Study of Japanese Attitude Discloses That Empire is Apparently Determined to Defy Rest of World in Maintaining Possession of the Islands

A few dots on the map of the Pacific have become gigantic problems to the statesmen of the nations who hold peace in the Pacific in their hands. This is the first of a series of authoritative articles by the State Department correspondent of International News Service on the engrossing questions surrounding Japan's retention of the islands given her under mandate of the League of Nations, from which she has withdrawn. The articles tell plainly why these apparently insignificant protuberances in the vast Pacific have suddenly assumed a tremendous importance.

By KINGSBURY SMITH
International News Service Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1935, International News Service)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—(INS)—A study of Japan's attitude toward the mandated islands in the Pacific today discloses that the Nippon Empire apparently is just as determined to defy the rest of the world in maintaining possession of those stepping-stones to Hawaii and other American possessions in the Pacific as it was in seeking naval parity.

Tokyo, in effect, has told both the League of Nations and Germany that if anyone wants to take those islands away from Japan, they will have to do it by force.

Japan does not regard its withdrawal from the League of Nations as having any bearing on its right to execute a mandate over the 623 little islands comprising the Caroline, Marshall and Mariana groups, formerly German possessions and now hailed by Nippon as its "naval life-line."

In fact, Japan considers the islands are "spoils of war" justly acquired as the price for her willingness to aid the Allies against Germany in the World War and that acceptance of the term "mandate" was merely to placate the idealism of Woodrow Wilson at the Paris Peace Conference.

Japan bases this claim to the islands on the secret agreements reached with Great Britain, France, Italy and Russia in 1917, when the four powers promised to support Tokyo's claim to the islands at the close of the World War if the Nippon Empire would assist the Allied cause.

These agreements were kept a profound secret from the American government at the time they were being made and were not even divulged when this country entered the war on the Allied side.

It was not until President Wilson went to Paris that he learned of the negotiations and it was indignation at the deception on the part of the Allied powers which was largely responsible for his insistence that Japan be granted only a mandate over the islands rather than actual possession.

Britain was the first to promise the islands to Japan. Several of them had been occupied by a Japanese naval squadron in 1914, following occupation of other German pacific possessions by an Australian naval force.

At the beginning of the fourth year of the great struggle, the strain upon the European allies was dangerous. With the announcement that after February 1, 1917, unrestricted submarine warfare would be begun, the strain became still more serious.

Great Britain requested Japan to render naval aid in the Mediterranean. Tokyo quickly took advantage of the situation to strike a bargain with Britain. The British Government was told Japan would send naval forces to the Mediterranean if Britain would support Japan's claims at the peace conference not only to Shantung, China, but also to the German islands in the Pacific north of the equator, that is, the Caroline, Marshall and Mariana islands.

In the exchange of notes dated February 16, 1917, England acquiesced. Japan promptly sent a cruiser and three destroyer divisions to the Mediterranean.

Japan, however, was not satisfied merely with the promise of Britain's support for the islands.

It wanted the support of the other Allied powers. It approached France and succeeded in obtaining the latter's support in an exchange of notes, dated March 1, France demanded that as the price for its willingness to support the Japanese claims, Tokyo must use its influence to induce China to break off diplomatic relations with Germany. To this, Tokyo agreed.

In a secret note dated March 5, Japan also obtained Russia's promise to support her claims. A little later the Italian foreign minister also agreed orally that his government "had no objection regarding the matter."

With the ending of the war in an Allied victory, Japan was quick to remind the western powers of their promise. On January 7, 1919, Japan presented its claims to the Allied Council of Ten.

Besides Shantung, it claimed the "unconditional cession of all the islands in German possession in the Pacific north of the equator." No mention was made of any mandatory system for the islands.

President Wilson immediately objected and insisted upon incorporation of the covenant of the League of Nations which would insure the role of the islands by mandate of the League and prevent annexation.

The powers generally were reluctant to grant Japan's demands but finally were prompted to compromise on the mandate by the following factors:

Japan had failed to obtain acceptance of its racial equality claim;

Its Pacific claims synchronized with those of Italy in the Adriatic at a crucial period of the Conference;

The islands had been promised

Three Persons Injured In Car and Truck Crash

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 1.—Three persons were sent to the Doylestown Emergency Hospital yesterday as a result of a collision between a truck and a pleasure car in front of the residence of C. C. Bucher, near Dublin.

The injured are: Maurice Brodsky, 54, of 1939 Georgian Road, Philadelphia; Sarah Brodsky, 22, a daughter; and Samuel Krupnick, 26, of 206 South Fulton street, Allentown. The injuries consist of lacerations, abrasions and possible internal injuries.

According to Highway Patrolman Jacoby, of the Doylestown sub-station, a truck driven by Roy Jackson, 39, of 1958 Warnock street, Philadelphia, collided with a sedan driven by Krupnick as the Krupnick car was passing a parked car in front of the Bucher residence. One side of the Krupnick car was completely crushed.

The truck was proceeding in the direction of Doylestown and the pleasure car was headed toward Dublin. Patrolman Jacoby placed Jackson under arrest for operating his truck without a Pennsylvania license.

SAYS BENSLEM DISTRICT IS HEAVILY PENALIZED

Samuel K. Faust Talks About School Finances To Rotary Club

URGES CONSOLIDATION

The Rotary Club of Bristol met in weekly session yesterday afternoon in the Elks Home, with president Jacob C. Schmidt, Sr., in charge.

The speaker of the day, Samuel K. Faust, superintendent of Bensalem Township public schools, was introduced by Jesse C. Everitt, Hulmeville.

Mr. Faust in his address explained the financial affairs and support of the school system by the state, and pointed out the penalty of being grouped in certain divisions. He mentioned as a very outstanding case the status of the Bensalem Township public schools, which last year were in second class entitling the township to 60 per cent of the teachers' salaries on account of having less than $100,000 tax valuation back of each teacher.

This year in passing that valuation the state appropriation dropped automatically to 35 per cent of the salaries, "thus penalizing this particular school heavily."

The speaker dwelt on the fact that smaller schools could be made much more efficient by being absorbed by the neighboring larger districts. It was also explained that Bristol, owing to its population, is in the third group of 5,000 to 30,000.

A perusal of the apportionment schedule of state aid on the basis of teachers' minimum salaries, shows that a second class district with a population range of 30,000 to 500,000, with true wealth back of each teacher being over $100,000, receives 35 per cent of the minimum salaries; third class district with population range of 5,000 to 30,000, and true wealth of over $100,000 backing each teacher, receives 35 per cent of salaries, and with $50,000 to $100,000 backing each teacher, receives 60 per cent of the salaries.

TALKS OF SAFETY GLASS AT EXCHANGE MEETING

Dr. Harry Neher Gives Interesting Talk and Demonstration to Club

GUESTS ARE PRESENT

Dr. Harry Neher, one of the chemists at Rohm & Haas chemical works, gave an interesting lecture last evening to the members of the Bristol Exchange Club, on the subject of "Safety Glass."

He said the first effort to make laminated glass occurred about 50 years ago in England, but it was unsuccessful for manufacturing purposes. The first real success was attained in 1910, since which time many improvements have taken place. He explained the various processes and showed how the experiments which covered many years, resulted in an improvement of the gelatinous substance which is placed between the two pieces of glass.

The experiments which he conducted were intensely interesting. He placed a sheet of glass in a frame and then caused a three-pound brass ball to drop upon it from a height of four feet. He allowed the ball to drop upon other types of glass at a height of eight feet, and in every instance the glass was simply bent or cracked but not broken into fragments.

As a final experiment, he placed a piece of safety-glass into a frame and allowed the members of the club to throw a baseball at it from a short distance. The glass was cracked but not broken into fragments.

A number of guests were present at the meeting, and Dr. Neher's talk provided a very pleasant evening.

COST BUCKS COUNTY $21,224.66 MORE TO OPERATE DURING '34

NO TAX RATE INCREASE

Commissioners Decide to Carry On in 1935 Without Boosting Rate

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 1.—Bucks county's housekeeping bill in 1934 amounted to $736,018.48 according to the annual financial statement of the Bucks County Commissioners and the County Treasurer, both of which have been audited and approved. This is an increase of $21,224.66 over 1933 but due to a great extent to the increased institutional costs that must be paid annually by the county.

The Bucks County Commissioners however, are going to carry on the county's government without an increase in the county tax rate despite the fact that approximately $40,000 is due the county from the State government as the county's share of the gasoline tax for the last half of the year 1934, and in spite of the fact that $9,087.50 beer license funds which the county received last year, is now distributed to the various districts by reason of an Act of Assembly at the special session of December, 1933.

At the close of the year 1934 the balance on hand amounted to $3497.42, with approximately $75,000 notes outstanding, which is evidence of the efficient manner in which the county affairs have been managed, in spite of the fact $63,671.83 in county tax is due and unpaid.

The Commissioners have been commended for closing the year 1934 with another fine record which was a help in holding the tax rate to four mills for this year. They have also been commended for paring the budget to the bone.

Charitable institution costs in 1934 amounted to $112,886.93 while prison and other institutional expenses amounted to $45,516.66. The appropriation for support of the County Home was $60,000 in 1934, the same as the previous year. Inmates at the Norristown State Hospital cost the county $23,466.28; inmates at Allentown State Hospital cost $10,175.16, while Wernersville State Hospital inmates cost $3192.82 and Fairview State Hospital, $2304.85. Board and maintenance of children under the care of a probation officer cost $5059.95. Care of children at the Catholic Children's Bureau cost $1900.85 while those at the Lutheran Children's Home cost $1800.38.

It cost $13,447.77 for operation of the Bucks County Prison plant while supplies for board of prisoners cost $4820.73. Prisoners at the Eastern State Penitentiary cost $11,071.47 while those at the Pennsylvania Industrial Reformatory cost $4630.21. Glen Mills School inmates cost the county $1675.04 while support of inmates at the Slighten Farm School for Girls cost $3867.81. Medical services and supplies for prisoners cost $1053.50.

Court costs in 1934 amounted to $59,511.14 which included $12,872.24 for pay of grand and traverse jurors and $22,323.74 for court officers' pay and expenses. Criminal costs paid by the county amounted to $8555.43 while constable's commitments cost $1736.29. Costs on Justices' transcripts amounted to $2886.80. Fire Marshall service cost $1401 while the transcription of testimony cost the county $6170.40.

In the County Commissioners' office the expenses for 1934 amounted to $27,123.40, which included salaries and expenses. The expense of the County Treasurer's office was $9974.52. Expenses in other offices were as follows: Recorder of Deeds, $11,120; Register of Wills, $5780; Quarter Sessions, $4485; Prothonotary, $7689; Sheriff's office, $5119.99; Orphans' Court, $5080; auditors, $103.92. The total of salaries and expenses amounted to $83,198.94.

Bucks county paid $71,042.65 for damages and maintenance of roads in 1934, including $62,338.01 property damage settlements and $8693.11 for county aid for improvements to roads and bridges in townships and boroughs.

Six-Hour Traffic Delay As Trailer Breaks Loose

Traffic on the Lincoln Highway near the Fallsington underpass was tied up for nearly six hours last night, when the trailer of a truck operated by Harry Maddett, 31 years old, of Baltimore, Md., broke loose from the main truck and overturned. No one was injured. A load of cork, in bales, was piled upon the highway. State Highway Patrolman Stable detoured traffic through Fallsington until the highway was cleared.

WOOD TELLS TALES

Whatever may be the result of the Hauptmann case, those contemplating crime in future will hesitate to touch wood. There are so many ways that just plain tree lumber may have of telling tales.

Also the stock of government experts has been appreciably raised by the performance of Arthur Koehler, of the United States forestry service, as a witness. Few people ever suspected that a government expert could know so much about his subject.

Koehler showed that nearly everything that is done to a tree is made the subject of permanent record in the lumber.

Every year the trees grow. That growth is recorded as a ring that appears in a cross section of the wood when the tree is cut. There are good seasons and bad seasons that make wide rings and narrow rings and the rings vary in different trees according to the conditions to which they are subjected. The rings are as characteristic and individual in trees as are the finger prints of human beings.

Then there are saw marks and planing mill marks and tool marks and nail marks and each of these take on individuality according to makes of machines and the nicks and imperfections resulting from wear and tear and the handling of the workmen.

All of which proves what a convincing mute witness a stick of wood may become in the hands of a human witness whose powers of observation are highly trained.

DON'T CHANGE COOLIDGE

It was the most winning characteristic of the late Calvin Coolidge that in none of his public manifestations did he once step out of character. The stories about him and attributed to him, real and otherwise, made of him a type in which there was no discordant note, and a type which biographers hereafter will be quite powerless to change. On the whole, it was a type which, by its very lack of the demonstrative friendliness of his predecessor, endeared itself to the common mind.

We think it an unfortunate choice of words which represents Grace Coolidge in a current magazine article as trying to make the late president a "human" being. The word "human" is a flexible epithet, which signifies among other qualities a disposition to slap backs, to mix with the company and take the baritone part in "Sweet Adeline"—qualities which Coolidge never had. But in the less expansive meanings of the term, in the almost daily revelations of character in word and deed and point of view, he was human enough.

He was not human in the sense that his antithesis, Harding, was, and it is as pointless now to try to make him so as it is to alter any type in history, once it is crystallized. It is a little extraordinary to us that anyone would try.

The stock market has evidently made up its mind that premature worries concerning supreme court decisions is not likely to bring much grist to anyone.

Being supported in luxury by the government seems to be a popular modern concept of growing old gracefully.

None of the winners of past years has been a widely publicized expert. On the contrary, the titlists have come from the rank and file of average players supporting the theory that "full many a flower is born to blush unseen."

The local game captain of this contest is Mrs. Ellwood Minster, Pine Grove, at whose home the tournament will occur tonight. Committee in charge locally is composed of Mrs. S. Phillips Landreth and Mrs. Parke Morris Wetherill.

Scores of the Bristol players will be forwarded tomorrow morning to the World Bridge Olympic Committee in Rockefeller Center, New York. Results will be made known in about one month.

"THE LADY DANCES" MARGE STANLEY

CHAPTER XXI

Mark saw Vanya at the red iron pump beyond the Diver's Helmet, with a little heap of white clothes beside her. Barelegged, her tiny feet in worn slippers, she seemed charming to Mark, yet the memory of her yielding last night displeased him.

"She's rated herself," he reflected. "The best thing for me is to avoid her until the mail packet sails." And he did avoid her—for nearly the entire day. Dusk found him apologizing to his own strict New England code, and nevertheless approaching Vanya where she sat at the extremity of the point.

Vanya looked up with a wan smile at his approach; she seemed spiritless, forlorn, sitting alone in the darkness. She had changed her dress to her worn white breeches and a sleeveless blouse, and she seemed amazingly slender and tiny. "Boyish" wasn't the word, Mark thought—she looked feminine enough; "trim, neat, tailored," came closer to the point. On an impulse, he leaned over her and kissed her rather lightly on her lips; she made no move to evade him, but likewise made no response.

He seated himself beside her. "Vanya," he said, "I spent the whole day trying to avoid you." She nodded. "I noticed it." "And did you know why?" "Of course." She looked at him gravely. "It's because you regretted our—our bargain."

Mark frowned. Did he regret his own? He realized that he did not; what bothered him was Vanya's easy surrender, and her unhesitating acceptance of the position in which he had placed her.

"No," he said. "I keep my bargains."

He looked out at the Porpoise; the ship's harbor lights gleamed in the little cove like errant stars.

"What does Shene use that schooner for?" he asked.

"He pearls," said the girl in a dull voice. "The mate, Orris, the one that plays the piano, will take it out again in a day or two, and be gone eight or ten weeks."

"Who plays when he's gone?" asked Mark idly.

"Loring," said Vanya. "It's worse then," she added in a low voice.

"Why are you interested in the Porpoise?" she asked after a moment's silence.

"Ways and means!" said Mark. "We must have marriage papers of some sort; I think they may be purchased from Shene. After all, he's a ship's master, with the right to perform marriage ceremonies. But we'll have to arrange the thing before the Porpoise leaves."

"Why?" asked Vanya. "I haven't had any experience with—with—I don't know the rules."

"Because a ship's captain only has the authority to conduct these ceremonies on the high seas. The high seas begin three miles from land, and we'll have to sail the Porpoise out, just in case—If the witnesses think it's authentic, so much the better. This fellow Orris can be one, and one of the crew the other—but they're all black, aren't they?"

"Yes," said the girl.

"Well, there's bound to be a mission boy among them who can scribble his name. Or we could take Loring."

"Loring!" cried Vanya. "Never! Never in the world! This business is degrading enough without him—" She ended in a choked sob.

"Degrading?" said Mark cruelly. "Why should that matter? You chose your own way out of this."

"I'm sorry," said the girl, relapsing into the lifeless tone of her previous remarks. "I'm sorry, but please—not Loring! I couldn't stand the bitter, shrewd, smirking face he'd put on!"

"Would you have him wear the regalia of a wedding guest?" sneered Mark. "But all right—not Loring."

"When can we get the—thing over with?" the girl asked.

"Tomorrow — tomorrow!" said Mark. "The sooner the better!"

Then out of the night rose Loring's voice, oddly shrill, in a weird sort of chant.

"England is a woman, calling me again With a voice inhuman, To a world of men! England's eyes are like the lights Seen on foggy London nights"

With a beckoning that invites—England is a woman!"

Vanya shuddered at Mark's side; she seemed nervous and distraught at the uncanny keening voice.

"Drunk again!" said Mark. "Where the devil did he get the liquor?"

"He's not drunk," said the girl. "When he's drunk he sings about Hong and Shene. Sometimes he sings sober, like this, and that's the worst of all."

Again rose the strange song, like the voice of a disembodied spirit drifting out of some invisible bourne.

"Tonga is a woman Lying in a fen, With the art to summon Evil out of men!"

in him that he could not analyze; he knew only that sympathy moved him for the grave girl in his arms. Her lips were very close; he pressed a kiss on them. A mist dropped over him; he realized vaguely that his kisses were growing fiercer, bruiser, passionate—and a moment later Vanya was twisting, desperately away, beating at his face and shoulders! She thrust herself violently from his arms and ran down the coral spit toward the Cove.

"Vanya!" he called after her. She stopped, looking back at him; he could hear the panting of her breath.

"The mail packet doesn't sail for three weeks!" she said.

A HONEYMOON IN ECLIPSE
"We can manage!" said Pearly Shene. "They won't know nothing."

Vanya thrust herself violently from his arms and ran down the coral spit toward the Cove.

Here you stay and here you rot!"

"Tonga is a woman!"

The voice rose to a shrill, bitter, nerve-racking climax; and died into silence. Vanya clenched her white little hands into fists, and writhed under the spell of some powerful emotion.

"I hate him!" she murmured. "I hate him the worst of all at times like this; He won't forget, and he won't let anyone forget!"

She was almost sobbing. Mark drew her into his arms in an impulse to comfort her. She twisted until her face, with its haunted eyes, looked up into his; she reached her hand up and touched his bronzed cheek.

"I know now that our bargain was no mistake," she said. "It's worth everything to leave this place—everything! To see clean snow again, and normal people!"

She paused, staring off into the darkness where Loring was weaving his disturbing thoughts.

"Don't you realize the curse of this place, Mark?" she continued drearily. It was the first time she had ever used his given name; the sound of it on her lips sent a curious thrill through him. "It's this," she continued. "That every person here grows to hate the others. Hong hates Loring and Shene, and Loring hates Shene and Hong, and Shene hates all of us, and I'm no different. Only you, cold and strong, and fresh from a clean Northern land, are not yet one of us, we don't hate you and you don't hate us—yet!"

She closed her eyes.

"You're cruel and heartless, Mark; yet you're a better refuge than Tonga offers."

However, Mark was feeling anything but cruel and heartless. A confused babel of emotions stirred

They'll sign where I tell 'em!"

The Porpoise was slipping easily away from Tongatabu, rounding the reef into the open sea. Vanya, wearing the long black dress she had worn the first time Mark ever laid eyes on her, stood silently beside Shene in the stern. The unfailing tropical sun of the dry season blazed down on them, but a fresh wind countered its heat.

Shene spun the wheel; the little schooner heeled over into the wind, and the Cove, deserted except for Loring dozing beneath his tree, slid gradually astern.

"We can fix it," said Shene with a grin intended to be jovial. "I've got a mission boy aboard who can scribble his name—Paul Tubou. He'll do for the second witness. And neither him nor Orris will know but what it's a genuine splice. So they won't talk, and as for Pearly Shene—he never talks out of turn!"

Vanya's nervousness was becoming obvious; she gave an impatient gesture at Shene's remarks, and turned to walk forward along the deck. The breeze whipped her clothes about her; Shene followed her with his eyes.

"A nice figure!" he commented to Mark. "You're picking well, though for me—I like women more on the plump side. I like a waist with left to it; your lady's as slim in the middle as a marlin-spike!"

Mark felt a quiver of indignation run through him at Shene's cool appraisal. The devil with the fellow and his tastes!

"Aren't we three miles out yet?" he queried morosely.

"We'll make it a good five and be sure," said Shene. "Wind don't cost nothing."

MORRISVILLE FIVE TO PLAY HERE TONIGHT

By Jack Orr

With one non-league victory safely tucked under their belt, the Cardinals and Gray of Bristol High clash with Morrisville High on the Bristol court this evening.

Morrisville is leading the Lower Bucks County league with four consecutive victories while the boys of "Bill" Dougherty have met defeat in their three frays within the circuit.

Captain John "Huntsy" Kleinfelder, sharp shooting guard of the Blue and Gold will be the man to watch tonight. Kleinfelder was the man artillery of the Morrisville guns when these two clubs met on the up-river floor.

Kleinfelder's opponent will probably be Jim Spencer who was quite a success at his new position of forward on Tuesday night. Craig White, "Huntsy's" running mate is another ball-handler of note.

Coach "Peg" Pope's prancing protégés will meet the Morrisville sextet in the opening game of the evening. The Morrisville club was the winner when they clashed at Morrisville.

The gym team which received such admiring comment on Tuesday evening will perform once more. At each performance the boys of this club seem to improve.

In the second match of the evening the Falcons came from behind to net a triumph over the Eries, 39-27. Field goals by "Hunkie" Gallagher and Joe Roarity gave the Falcons the win. It was Roarity's only double-digger of the night.

"Johnny" Brady's three tie-in-pointers had much to do with the Falcons' win. It was a hard shot from the side which started a rally and decreased the Erie's early edge. Later a twister under the basket followed by an overhead shot from side court ad-dicted the score and the winning field goals were then sunk in.

"New" McGinley and "Jimmy" Lake did most of the scoring for the losing quintet. McGinley hit the cords for seven field goals while Lake was good for four two-pointers and three fouls. For the winners, Gallagher had 11 points and Brady 8.

"Marty" Fallon, captain of the winning aggregation, counted in the first two minutes of play and then was bottled for the rest of the evening. Yeagle and Sullivan, of Erie, were both held scoreless.

The next games will be played Tuesday night.

Japan Given Islands By Secret Agreement

The rising tide of Bolshevism and the possibility of Japan forming an alliance with Soviet Russia and Germany.

On May 6, 1919, Japan was granted a mandate over the islands by the Council of Three, composed of Great Britain, France and Italy.

On December 17, 1920, the Council of the League of Nations confirmed the mandate and laid down the conditions under which it was to be administered.

The western powers contend that the legal status of Japan's authority over the islands dates from the day on which the League Council confirmed the mandate.

Furthermore, it is contended in some League quarters that Japan's withdrawal from the League of Nations raises the question of her right to retain the islands.

Japan refuses to recognize either of these contentions and insists that practical sovereignty over the islands was given her by the Allied and Associated powers at the Peace Conference and that the League of Nations has nothing to do with it.

On February 20, 1933, a Japanese foreign office spokesman declared the islands would be kept "even if Japan has to resort to force."

Again on February 9, 1934, when Berlin was talking about reclaiming the mandates, the Japanese foreign office spokesman warned Japan was "determined to retain the islands at any cost."

Thus, does the Japanese dragon show its fangs to those who would take back what once they gave the Nippon Empire.

The second of this series of four articles on the Pacific Mandated Islands will deal with Japan's fortification of the islands.
